

Samsung flags eightfold jump in quarterly profit as AI chip demand pumps prices

Samsung has emerged as one of the major beneficiaries of the AI data centre boom that has constrained supply for traditional chips

Published – April 07, 2026 09:06 am IST

REUTERS

The company will release details of its first-quarter earnings on April 30 [File] | Photo Credit: REUTERS

Samsung Electronics on Tuesday projected its first-quarter earnings would exceed its entire profit for last year, beating expectations as booming demand for artificial intelligence infrastructure stretched supply and drove chip prices higher.

Samsung has emerged as one of the major beneficiaries of the AI data centre boom that has constrained supply for traditional chips used in smartphones, PCs and game consoles and led to a near-doubling in chip prices in the first quarter alone.

In Case You Missed It

Stock markets tumble in early
trade amid fresh tensions in West...

Deepika Padukone
breaks silence on
'Dhurandhar 2',
replies to trolls

Indian tech firms
to forecast a diverging recovery
in FY27 even as...

How the math
works on a $1.75
trillion SpaceX
valuation

Oil prices rise again and Asian stocks retreat on the fragile Iran...

Russia sees
China's WeChat,
Douyin as models
for its homegro...

Intel joins Elon
Musk's Terafab AI
chip project to power humanoid...

World Bank raises
India's FY27 GDP growth
projections to...